

First Aid Training

First Aid at Work is a legal requirement that is often overlooked, O'Connell-Hoare were requested to assess this for an organisation in South London which had 25 staff and over 100 visitors each day (including children).

OH assessed the requirements for the number of competent first aiders and were subsequently appointed to arrange training for additional personnel.

The First Aid at Work training session included AV and a classroom session on the common workplace requirements for a First Aid Competent Person, practical application of the skills learned, when to call 999 for an ambulance, recording of medical conditions and RIDDOR, use of the First Aid Book, The Use of Defibrillators, practical work on a First Aid Dummy and protection of the First Aider.

All attendees received full certification.
